

Ah yes, the creation of social media. Who would we be without it? Happier, probably. No, definitely. I had a moment last fall where the keyboard on phone glitched out and I couldn't type anything. What was the point in going into comment sections then? Nothing. I found myself enjoying the content I consumed a lot easier now that I wasn't going out of my way to see everyone else's opinions about it. I do love how people form connections online especially with common interest but there is psychology behind the way negative things affect one a lot then positive things, making social media a hard place to be.